Part IV Translation

Zongzi, originally used to worship ancestors and gods, has become a popular daily food. During the Dragon Boat Festival of each year, almost every household will enjoy it, which, prevailing in China for thousands of years, has been one of the most influential and extensive folk eating customs, and spread to Korea, Japan and Southeast Asian countries. The tasty dish is mainly made of glutinous rice wrapped in bamboo, reed or other large flat leaves. Due to the huge difference of eating habits in different regions, zongzi has developed into the flavors of the north and south. The fillings in northern zongzi consisted largely of white rice, red beans, dates, and a sugar dressing, while the ones in south are more diversified in south, including meat, fruit, eggs, peanuts and so on.
